---- Headline: Second Landing on Selene ----
On the 5th of December 2025, a fresh crew of cosmonauts would arrive at the Phoenix Drop Spaceport. The crew of five, Alexander Starfall, Yamada Sakura, Suzuki Ichiro, Marina and Aurora Sanchez, would be the largest mission to Selene to date. Starfall is the first cosmonaut of Celestian origin, being from the Ce'leste National Aeronautics Programme.

The crew would board the RSRO Starship at 1:50p RST, as Apollo 4 would take flight. The Starship would reach the landing point set up by the previous mission at the Selenian South Pole on the 7th of December 2025. At 7:07p RST, the Apollo IV crew would disembark from the Starship and set foot on Selene once more.

The crew would expand the shelter by the landing pad, adding new technologies like oxygen generation experiments and the first prototype airlock. Additionally, the first paths and roads began to be formed in the Selenite dust as the crew created the fabric for future colonisation missions.
"It is with this mission that the National Space Program will have the hopes to elevate humanity's position among the stars, and that this crew is a piece of history in the making."
- Alexander Hull, Director of RASA (Space Programme)

After another 3-day mission, on the 10th of December 2025 at 10:31a RST (Today), the crew would board the Starship and begin their ascent home to Gaia once again. They are expected to return home on the 12th of December, two days from today.

We asked for comment from some RASA scientists and researchers, and the following was what they had to say about the Apollo Programme.
"Apollo is the nation's most ambitious project by a long shot. The Chairman offered us 5% of the yearly budget, and RASA greatly appreciates this support. However, the Apollo Programme's ambition stretches far beyond budgetary and technological restraints, whereas the current timeline pushes us to strain resources in the name of speed. This has a non-zero chance of creating major safety and engineering risks in the future, where we may be using untested technologies in a distant, uncharted territory.

We must take a meticulous approach to Apollo, and so this programme must take more time. Science mustn't be rushed, and we hope that the Government may take these opinions into consideration."
- Dr Lena Bianchi, Lead Scientist on the Apollo programme.

These concerns from within RASA introduce a more cautious perspective on the Apollo Programme's rapid expansion. Addressing the mission the following day, Chairman Aaron Lycan offered a markedly different, more optimistic view.

"The Apollo IV mission is just as monumental in Ruaunese history as Apollo III. Both missions establish humanity's collective position on the moon, and Selene is our collective gateway to the universe beyond. It is an honour to preside over these historic moments, and I hope that many good things come of it. As per the international community, we invite the Ausolians to join us on Selene! We understand that Ru'aun is isolationist, coming out of defeat against the Ausolians, but that must not hinder Gaian progress."

- Chairman Aaron Lycan, Leader of Ru'aun (9 Dec 2025)
The Chairman issued the aforementioned statement as he turned to a positive, pan-Humanist perspective on the mission. This is quite a stark shift from his staunchly isolationist policy, but a welcome one by the public, according to a poll by TelePoll (an independent agency) yesterday.

---- DEVELOPING: Home and Horizon: The Shift to Isolationism ----
Since the defeat to Ausolia in the Second Weltkrieg, Ru'aun has entered a new phase of geopolitical realignment, emphasizing domestic reconstruction and revitalization while reducing foreign engagement. The National Government has shifted strategic priorities, reallocating funds from wartime defence to a still-substantial peacekeeping army, as noted in the December 25 Report published by the army. Additional resources and funds will be directed toward infrastructure and public welfare, in line with the December 2025 Budget Protocols passed by the National People's Congress yesterday.

In international news, the Julius-Müller Pact was signed between the People's Republic of Ru'aun and the Empire of Tyrus in Laconia. The five-year non-aggression treaty allows Ru'aun to withdraw from the East Icaric theatre, enabling the Red Army to focus on mainland defence. While the government has emphasized the strategic benefits of the agreement, public opinion remains divided. TelePoll reported that 56% of citizens support the treaty, 41% oppose it, and 3% abstained from commenting.

"The government has made some divisive decisions in foreign affairs as of late. While some citizens support the move toward isolationism and the recent non-aggression pact with Tyrus, others remain cautious. Public opinion is clearly mixed, which could have a notable impact should a snap election be held in January, as called for by the United Alternative," said a TelePoll commentator.

In addition to the government's strategic adjustments in Eastern Icarica, Ru'aunese forces have withdrawn all military assets from Tugana following its unification with Auskia, a member state of the Ausolian Confederation, as noted in the December 25 Report. Diplomatic personnel were also withdrawn from the continent, leaving only the Ruaunese Embassy in Ausolia—the nation's oldest diplomatic mission—operational. Tariffs of up to 50% were imposed on all Ausolian (including Tuganan) goods, affecting the availability of imported products. These measures form part of the government's ongoing policy of autarky, with the goal of reducing Ru'aun's dependence on trade from abroad.

In short, Ru'aun is undergoing the largest shift in foreign policy since the First Weltkrieg, and this could affect the daily lives of many. Our editors advise citizens to exercise caution regarding personal savings and spending, and to contact local MPs about any changes to laws under the new status quo.

---- Editorial: The Future of Ru'aun (w/ Chairman Lycan) ----
The Telegraph invited Chairman Aaron Lycan to our headquarters in Everdusk for an interview and commentary. This is what he had to say about the nation.

"Ru'aun has been under fluxuating circumstances since the First Revolution. Our nation has always been fighting for its life, and we held on. However, we have faced defeat after defeat to the hands of our adversaries, and our own socialist comrades no less. It is disheartening that we had to fight the Ausolians twice, and more disheartening that the nation has faced defeat after defeat to the mainlanders. What the nation needs to do is shift its priorities away from constant wars against the mainland towards self-care and revitalisation. We have been strained heavily, and now we need to repair the foundations of the People's Republic.

Isolationism and Autarky are some words that, understandably, scare many people in the country. In fairness, these are ideas that Ru'aun has never tried in its hundred-year history. We are living in new times, and we must embrace new ideas. Isolationism, in particular, is something that we have never naturally faced. We have always traded with powers abroad, whether it be the Tokju to our East, Ce'leste to our north, or Tugana to our South. Now, we must lessen on the powers that have delivered defeat time and time again. Our country has the capacity for self-reliance, and thus we must use our own resources to our advantage.

We will embark on the course of fully utilising our own resources, bringing new jobs to the people and ensuring that everyone will be employed. We must prevent shortages and catastrophes, and so we must work together in arms to ensure that Ru'aun can prosper in solidarity and security."
- Chairman Aaron Lycan, RWP and Ruaunese Leader.

The Chairman's address is expected to reverberate across the continent. Tokju analysts warn that national isolation could destabilise long-standing trade routes, while Ce'leste envoys privately express concern that a Ruaunese military-industrial push may reignite tensions along the northern corridor. Domestically, the RWP's reformist wing has cautiously welcomed the chairman's rhetoric, yet several MPs and governors from the coastal prefectures fear that strictly following a policy of national autarky could and would jeopardise their port-based economies. Whatever course the nation follows, the chairman's declaration ensures that the nation and the world around it will feel mass reverberations.

---- Editorial/Interview: Red Sun, Cyan Star (w/ Leon Legasi & Leon v. Legacy) ----
The Telegram was able to reach out to the mysterious Leon v Legacy in Ce'leste, organising a meeting between him and the Vice-Chairman Leon Legasi. This is a one-of-a-kind experience, where two parallel people can meet for the first time. The following is a transcript of a conversation and interaction between the parallels, with some notes from chief editor Konrad Flemmenberg.

- Konrad: Good evening, gentlemen. Welcome to Everdusk. It's a pleasure to have you both here.
- Leon Legasi (Legasi): It's an honour to be here under the extraordinary times we're living in.
- Leon von Legacy (Legacy): It is an honour as well to meet my parallel today in Ru'aun.
- Konrad: Well then, can you introduce each other?
- Legasi: I am the Vice-chairman of Ru'aun, chosen by Chairman Lycan for the position. I come from the House of Legacy, and the same with my sister Alina.
- Legacy: I am the former king of Ce'leste and the former CEO of Novo Élysèe. I was also once the prince of Old Elysia, in the distant Northeast of our world. Some say I'm a time traveller, I say that I have mended the break between it.
- Konrad: Quite interesting then. Legacy, what encouraged you to come to this present moment in our world's history? What connections do you have across this timeline?
- Legacy: I'm the ancestor of the House of Legacy, and I created the family myself after marrying my wife, Guadalupe. Alina is my distant granddaughter, and Legasi, as well, is my distant grandson. I found myself here because Ce'leste has been on the decline ever since the rise of Ru'aun. I do not have hostility against Legasi, but I wish to help Ce'leste return to the path towards power again.
- Konrad: Legasi, what do you think about your ancestor appearing again today?

- Legasi: I'm speechless about what is unfolding today. Never did I expect to meet the father of my family, and I am filled with a mix of glee and fascination over what I am living through today.
- Legacy: I am, as well, left speechless knowing that I have arrived at this very moment, of all moments in history, to meet the distant decendents of my family and what they have become. I am proud of my legacy, and I can not begin to say how breathtaken I am today.
- Konrad: Well then, I am glad that I have allowed you two to meet. I hope you two can continue to provide for the world.

Post-meeting individual dialogue:
- Crown Prince Leon von Legacy: This time that I have arrived at, three hundred Varnan years and one hundred Icaric years after my time, is certainly not what I expected to come to. Ru'aun had once been a state forced back into a tribal state after the loss of Irene and the fading hope. Ce'leste and Astra Nova are in a state of ruin now, and Ru'aun has taken the mantle of the world. Never could I expect this to come of the world. I have faith in Ru'aun, the home of my descendant, but I am glad I have appeared today and only today.

What I find people do not speak enough of is the focus on Icarica alone after the fading of Ce'leste. Nobody speaks of the worlds beyond the region. West of Ruaun and Icarica is Tu'la, North of Ru'aun is Ce'leste, and east of the East Icaric island is Gal'ruk. I am saddened that the world has become Icaric-centric, but I am proud that this region alone has come such a long way from the disorganised chaos of the past I came from. I am proud of this world. I am proud to have arrived here.

Vice-Chairman Leon Legasi: Never could I expect I would meet my ancestor in my life. I'm more than likely going to invite my sister here to meet him, since she idolises his legacy so much. I am at a loss for words today, but I hope that many things come of this fateful day. Thank you.

---- BREAKING: Hurricane Gene strikes Ru'aun. ----

On the 27th of December, the holiday season would reach an abrupt end, as Hurricane Gene would initially come 'out of nowhere' from the west and strike Falconclaw. The storm, a Category III hurricane, tore apart the majority of critical infrastructure in Falconclaw, O'Khasis, and Nahakra. The storm would curve back to sea, but an unexpected series of events led it to a second landfall in Neu Freiberg and the outskirts of Everdusk. The cities were devastated, and the majority of Ru'aun's major western population centres now find themselves inundated and in ruin. The government would hold an emergency session in Phoenix Drop, reorganising the city as a provisional capital for the purpose of managing the disaster.

Due to the hurricane, there was a logistical nightmare for reconstruction parties, the military, the administration, and the evacuation. Around fifty-million citizens were forced to evacuate inland, with the Bramble Corridor highway being overcapacity for the entire week. Phoenix Drop, New Metali, and Scaleswind faced an influx of refugees, as the entire west coast was forced to leave their homes. Neu Freiberg saw the inverse, as ethnic Tugans flooded towards the city to cooperate on reconstruction.

The evacuation was one of the largest feats in human history, with unmatched levels of national cooperation to ensure that the fifty-million people on the coast were able to seek shelter. The largest issue presented was the lack of emergency communication during the storm, as the vast majority of communication lines fed directly into Falconclaw, which had been evacuated for the storm and rendered non-operational.

Following intensive investigation by the central government, it was found that Hurricane Gene was known by the board of directors of MeteoNat (National Meteorologist Group). The standing director, an independent from New Metali, stated that it was a collective decision of the board to overlook the once-small tropical storm to prevent widespread fear from growing among the public. This was followed by vast public outrage, and TelePoll cited that around 87% of citizens polled selected 'highly disapprove' against MeteoNat. The National Emergency Board unanimously agreed to dismiss the majority of its members, with MeteoUni (Union of Meteorologists Ru'aun) tasked with appointing a new board. This is the first time a union has directly appointed critical positions in a state-run enterprise in nearly a decade. TelePoll noted that roughly 59% of people polled agreed with this decision, with 24% disagreeing and the rest abstaining.

Following the removal of the old Board, MeteoUni elected to release multiple classified memos from internal documentation. The following is the most notable and controversial memo among the released documents.
"Int. Memo #7067
Issuer: Director Mire Becker
Sub.: Hurr. Gene

- In reference to the ordinance in #7063, Hurricane Gene is to be unpublished by the board, and all forecasts will predict de-escalation.
- In addition, as per #7065, all members of the board must sign an NDA regarding #7060 to #7067.

- As per #7065, emphasis will be placed on the 'calm' waters of the Tugan Strait and Seijo Ocean.
- As per #7066, as a matter of national security, all recent memos are to be classified, and only updated data will be sent to the military high command.
- As per #7062, several 'whistle-blowers' ([REDACTED FOR SAFETY]) shall be dismissed from their positions, with further dismissals to be decided by the board before the New Year.
- As per #7060, Hurricane Gene is projected to make landfall on 26 December 2025. Authorities will be notified, but not the general public.
- As per #7061, Hurricane Gene is defined as a category III hurricane projected to strike Falconclaw and Everdusk in a string of four-day perilous events.
- This memo recommends an evacuation order to the national government on 25 December 2025.
- This memo recommends the deletion of all preceding memos between #7060 and #7066.
- This memo ordains a mandatory meeting of the board on 25 December 2025."

This was a released MeteoNat archives memo through MeteoUni on 4 January 2026. All preceding memos appear to have been deleted from digital records, with some partially-shredded paper copies found near the Nahakra City Incinerary Facility, according to a custodian working at the plant (and independently-verified by an investigation).

Memo #7067 has sparked, by a wide margin, large-scale public outrage. After repolling, TelePoll saw numbers shift to a 91% consensus against MeteoNat, with a small margin abstaining. With outrage still in the air, MeteoUni's actions have brought a relative sense of calm regarding the situation. With that in mind, the National Government is slated to begin the rollout of the reconstruction plans by 6 January 2026. Logistical issues are prevalent, but the military has stepped in with major naval and logistical support, cooperating with the civilian reconstruction authorities.

We will continue to update you as the situation evolves, and the Telegraph will provide humanitarian assistance and resources at its Everdusk Headquarters.

---- Developing: From Skirmish to Détente and Peace ----

On 3 January 2026, a skirmish would erupt between Ruaunese and Celestian border garrisons over the Celestian Mountains. About five-hundred soldiers would partake in this event, with seven Ruaunese and five Celestian deaths, with roughly a dozen casualties on both sides. The skirmish would end quickly, as commanders from both sides ordered to end the fighting before further escalation. The rise of social media has allowed us to witness what occurred, and an independently-verified video from a Ruaunese private allowed us to pinpoint the source of the skirmish. According to the aforementioned video (posted on BlueBird, for those who seek to view it), it began with insults sent between commanders, leading to escalation from privates with the support of their commanders.

On 4 January 2026, Ruaunese Chairman Aaron Lycan and Celestian Ambassador Leon von Legacy (separate from Ruaunese Vice-Chairman Leon Legacy) would hold a summit in Phoenix Drop, negotiating the formalisation of the previous policy of Détente. The following day, the Ruaun-Celestian Treaty of Mutual Friendship was signed, formalising AZIA's position as an international mandate and mandating the demilitarisation of the Celestian Mountains. For the first time in recorded history, the mountain range has a minimal military presence. TelePoll noted that 78% of Ruaunese people support this official détente, marking a shift in public opinion toward Ce'leste (a stark contrast from a previous TelePoll report marking 38% approval in Late 2025).

It is expected that Ce'leste may become an observer nation of the Ruaunese Commonwealth by the 16th of January, as they will become the first non-Commonwealth nation to join the Phönixfalen Area and sign on to the Commonwealth Free Trade Accord.

The potential to change the tides of world politics is increasingly significant, but only time will tell how public relations progresses. Prediction markets in Ce'leste tend to report roughly 60% to 80% in favour of the ratification of these treaties, though TelePoll shows that there is much public doubt about the validity of these betting markets (noted in December with 54% against and 38% in favour, the rest abstain).

The Telegraph is committed to freedom of information and shall release updates on public relations.

---- To the Stars: Apollo V and Selene ----

On 26 December 2025, the day after Christmas, the largest mission of the Apollo program would commence. A total of nine cosmonauts, a combination of the Apollo III and IV crews, would board the RSRO Starship. The goal of this mission was to establish a semi-permanent Selenite settlement on its South Pole, with hopes of establishing livable spaces on the surface or subterranean.

"RASA Mission Procedure: Declassified Release.
Mission: Apollo V - Selene
Crew Members: Axel Klein, Lucy Klein, Toyohiro Azuma, Aya Kosumosu, Alexander Starfall, Yamada Sakura, Suzuki Ichiro, Marina Sanchez, Aurora Sanchez.
Objective: Establish a semi-permanent Selenite base.
Location: Selenite South Pole Landing Site
Launch Site: Phoenix Drop Starport
Estimated Selenite Mission Time: 9 Days (216 Hours)
Estimated Round-Trip Travel Time: 6 Days (3 Days/72 Hours each way)
Press Reservations: Ru'aun Telegraph, People's World, Ru'aun Today, Icarica Daily, Young Activists, Icaric Times.
Broadcaster: RNPB (Ruaunese National Public Broadcasting)"
- RASA Documentation Release, 4 January 2026

On the 26th of December, at roughly 9:35 a.m. RST, the crew would launch from Phoenix Drop. Reporters present said that it was a spectacle to see the crowds on the beaches watching the Starship take flight from the Spaceport out at sea. On the 29th of December, at roughly 6:14 a.m. RST, the Starship would make a landing in the Selenite South Pole. Thus, the crew would disembark at once to begin the setup of a new habitation.

The crew, equipped with new drilling equipment, would carefully excavate Selenite rock from a depression in the crater to create a subterranean habitat, transporting rock samples to the ship for return to Gaia. Following this, the crew would begin to create concrete and steel walls to raise a shelter. In the meantime, they would begin relocating the previous temporary base into the new shelter, developing the first "operational" Selenite base. The following is what cosmonaut Toyohiro had to say.
"At first, it was strange to begin this project. It felt like working a Gaian job, but on the surface of Selene. It was surreal once the building came together. You see this glass dome on the top, but the real building lies below the surface. We have such advanced machines that ten years ago, you would have thought this would be science fiction. Now, we have airlocks and research centres coming together, and even the first permanent space computer being placed here. Sure, this might be an early experiment, but it's great knowing that we are a part of something greater."

After a 9-day excursion of base construction, which would take advantage of pre-fabrication for the first time in space, the crew would board the Starship once more. A major issue with their return will be that they were informed of Hurricane Gene on 28 December, while they were still en route to Selene. They will have to use a makeshift landing pad, as the Spaceport was used for reconstruction logistics. This will prove a major issue, as the spacecraft was not designed to land on moving objects on Gaia.

Today, on 7 January 2026, the crew begins its return approach to Gaia. There is speculation that there will be last-minute readjustments to a new landing location, but we must now hope that they land safely on Gaia. The Telegraph will update this article upon landing with further details.

---- Beyond the Seas: Aquilan Civil War and a Third Weltkrieg? ----

On 26 December 2025, the Republic of Aquila would hold elections. In a shock move, the Nationalist Coalition would win a slim majority of 52.1%. This sparked outrage from the other political parties of the nation, as the Democratic parties (Conservative, Liberal, Green, Social Democrat) would form a coalition known as the Democratic Front. This coalition would refuse to recognise the nation's electoral results, and they would eventually secede in an attempt to overthrow the nationalist government, which they claimed rigged the elections. This marked the beginning of the Aquilian Civil War.

On 27 December, the Ausko-Tugan Federation would back the Democratic Front, which would be renamed to the Aquilan Provisional Government. Hours later, the Communist Party and Totalist Party of Aquilia would jointly break away, establishing the Aquilan Commune. Ru'aun would back the Commune through volunteer forces, but Ru'aun was unable to directly intervene.

Later during the afternoon on 27 December, Tugana would form a bloc, officially named the Democratic Compact. It would be made up of the Ausko-Tugan Federation and the Republic of Oskovia. The Ausolian Confederation's member states would be observers of the alliance. Lavinia and Lunaria would be invited later in the day as well, and the Compact would come to include four members. The Compact would make successful pushes against the Tyrian-backed Nationalist Government, as the battle for Talonia would ensue. Aquilian President (NC) Julien Moreau would be captured by the Compact, but Ru'aun would take him as a prisoner themselves.

The civil war would come to a stalemate after the 27th, as Ruaunese volunteers turned back to Ru'aun to assist recovery from Hurricane Gene. However, following the reestablishment of a Ruaunese Provisional Military Command Centre (RPMCC) in Phoenix Drop, they would aim to return. On the 6th of January, Ru'aun officially allied with the Aquilian Commune, drawing itself into the civil war.

By the 7th, the Nationalist Coalition was falling apart. Compact forces would scramble to topple the government before the Tyrians would attempt to annex the nation, as noted by a leaked meeting video circulating on BlueBird. The most radical decision was the joint Tugan-Ausolian bombing of Tyrus.

Reports from the frontline show hundreds of humbers descending upon Tyrus, blockading all trade and destroying the city. Another viral video circulating on BlueBird shows a clip of the "Sarfatti Eagle of Fascist Vitalization" on the Tyrian capital building collapsing in flames, which is used as a rallying point for Tyrian partisans. During this crossfire, the Ruaunese treaty port in Tyrus was bombed, with nearly a hundred sailors dead and several sunken ships. The Ruaunese government vowed retaliation for the blockade on its treaty port and on its shipping lanes, which sail roughly 200 kilometres north of the coastline. The severing of Ruaunese trade with its Gal'ruk trading partners has led to Ru'aun deploying its fleet in the region, while transporting many soldiers to the Aquilian Commune's territories.

The event that sparked "Third Weltkrieg" speculation was the alliance between the openly Fascist nation of Tyrus and the Ruaunese bloc. The alliance, colloquially dubbed the "Axis" by commentators on BlueBird, is a pragmatic alliance between the two nations to protect trade interests in the north and fight a common enemy in Aquilia. TelePoll notes that this move is heavily controversial, with only 41% in support and 56% in opposition of the alliance. TelePoll cited that most people in favour of the alliance noted anti-capitalist and anti-Tugan sentiment. TelePoll also cited that those in opposition noted that Tyrus is an openly fascist and oppressive regime. The Telegram will not lean heavily into political dialogue, but we will note that the opposing view does raise the question of human rights violations in the region.

The Telegraph will keep its readers updated and informed about the rapidly-shifting pace of war in the region, and we are committed to unbiased (to our best extent) wartime journalism.

Update 1: Vice-Chairman Legacy Threatens to Resign
"To the people of the world, you may know me as the second-in-line of the world's most important nation. You may argue in favour of or against me, but we can agree on one thing. War and conflict are not the solution to our problems. We must seek peace and end the needless deaths of millions that have preceded us. Thus, I openly announce my plans to resign and form the Pacifist Desk of the Workers' Party within one week if this conflict does not reach a ceasefire or truce. I will not stand for these conflicts any longer."
- Vice Chairman Leon Legacy.

In a sudden turn of events, Leon Legacy has turned against the incumbent government, citing war weariness among the people. He cites the need to find a peaceful resolution to the ever-escalating Third Weltkrieg before millions are sent to serve on the frontlines. Later statements showed that he was openly against the previous alliance with Tyrus, citing the openly fascist kingdom's poor human rights record and leaked reports of an ongoing genocide of their Vivisci minority.

Update 2: Agreement with Tyrus?
"---- (Draft) Treaty of Ephesus ----
1. Ethnic Vivisci territories shall be transferred to Ruaunese management under an "Administration for Burdigala".
2. All ethnic Vivisci held in concentration camps shall be transferred to Ruaunese Burdigala.
3. The Empire of Tyrus shall be renamed to the Tyrian Social Republic
4. The Tyrian Military shall receive orders from Ru'aun for the duration of the war.
5. Tyrus will be allowed to continue its leadership over its country, but with Ruaunese advisors in their government.
6. Tyrus will be colloquially identified as a Kingdom until further notice (rather than as an Empire).

7. Post-war, Tyrus may retain independence from all foreign powers, including Ru'aun."
- Leaked Ruaunese Government Draft, 8 January 2026

The aforementioned leaked treaty sparked many questions, with TelePoll noting an increase in abstentions on its most recent poll regarding the treaty. The treaty aims to cut down the Tyrian regime's ability to continue the genocide of the Vivisci people, while simultaneously drifting the nation away from the hardline fascist ideology it claims to be. There are some notable clauses, such as the Social Republic Clause (3), the Post-War Independence Clause (7), and the Continued Leadership Clause (5). We can note that the Ruaunese delegation has gone to great lengths, offering several concessions, to court Tyrus into its sphere. Critics question whether such structural reforms can be imposed under wartime conditions without legitimising the existing regime, as the world holds its breath, waiting for the outcomes of this to-be-significant treaty.

Update 3: Tyrian Alliance goes Official - Treaty of Ephesus
"---- Treaty of Ephesus ----
1. Ethnic Vivisci territories shall be transferred to Ruaunese management under the "Union of Burdigala".
2. All ethnic Vivisci held in concentration camps shall be transferred to Burdigala.
3. The Empire of Tyrus shall be renamed to the Tyrian Social Republic until further notice.
4. The Tyrian Military shall receive orders from the Ruaunese High Command for the duration of the war.
5. Tyrus will be allowed to continue its leadership over its country, but with Ruaunese advisors in their government.
6. Tyrus will be colloquially identified as a Kingdom until further notice.
7. Post-war, Tyrus may retain independence from all foreign powers, including Ru'aun.
8. Tyrus may be admitted into the Internationale until the end of the war, where admission will be renegotiated.
9. Aquilian reunification negotiations must begin within 1 week between the Nationalists and Socialists.
---- Signed by ----
- The People's Commonwealth of Ru'aun
- L'Imperio di Tyrus (Tyrian Social Republic)"
- Official Ruaunese Government Release, 9 January 2026

After reviewing the treaty, we were able to verify the validity of the previous leaked draft. The treaty was expanded following a day of additional negotiations, and we see that the leaders of the nations were able to find a middle ground. It is evident that the Ruaunese delegation would take advantage of the Tyrian desperation, but they were able to secure the Vivisci minority and evacuate them from the Tyrian concentration camps, ending the Burdigala Genocide for the most part. Ruaunese authorities stated that the Union of Burdigala would come under Ruaunese protection, but they will host their first election after the war ends. Tyrus has also become a sort-of Ruaunese protectorate, shielded from further Compact aggression, but forced to concede some of their autonomy.

The Tuganan reaction was mixed, supporting the end of the Vivisci Genocide and the taming of Tyrus, but raising concerns over the Aquilian Commune (People's Republic of Aquilia). The Tuganan authorities did not want to see the PRA becoming stronger and resisting reunification, but Ru'aun has made it clear that it will not back down to any ultimatums, as per a press release by the Premier of the People's Congress.

Further updates may roll out throughout the rest of the week.

---- Editorial: Red Sun, Purple Moon ----
- Submitted by Ruaunese Vice-Chairman Leon Legacy
Good day, Telegraph readers. I'm Leon Legacy, and I seek to speak to you regarding the state of the world.

Our nation, the Commonwealth of Ru'aun, has had a rich history, born from the unification of tribes and forged in countless wars. Today, we find ourselves in a historically significant time, one where the tides of history will be shifted by the ripples of the present.

To begin, I wish to offer my condolences to the over one-hundred thousand comrades lost during the catastrophe of Hurricane Gene. It is a shame that corruption led to such a catastrophe, and that we were unable to further the safety of our citizens. I call for our government to take preventative actions against corruption in the hope that such a disaster may never happen again. And to the victims of Gene, I am so deeply sorry that I could not prevent this disaster, and I only hope to serve you better.

Turning to the main issue, I want to talk about the state of the government. As many of you remember, I have threatened to resign from the position of Vice-chairman in the hopes to nudge our government towards peace abroad. Thus far, I applaud the government for its success! They have made strides by signing an armistice in Aquila, beginning reunification negotiations, and even a ceasefire on the Tyrian front! Even more so, the government has liberated the Vivisci from the genocide by Tyrus! We have successfully prevented the further loss of lives in the east, and I'm ever more grateful that my calls have been heard.

Turning forward, we need to focus on the issue of heightened tensions globally. Tugana has historically been hostile to Ru'aun, and even more so in the present. Rather than answering them with open hostility, I can only hope that our government begins open relations with Tugana and addresses the root causes of our mutual aggression, whatever those may be.

Thank you to the Telegraph for allowing me to speak in this prestigious newspaper.

---- Commonwealth 2026: The Era of Cooperation ----

"Treaty of Lanterns
A Phoenixi Parliament will be established, with one seat per million people across the commonwealth. Every member state is guaranteed a minimum of five seats in the parliament. In addition, the Commission will be placed as the upper house of the new government, serving to approve legislation passed by the Parliament. Every nation may now appoint an additional commissioner, raising each nation's allotted seat count to three.

The first Commonwealth Parliamentary Elections will be held on January 24, 2026 (IRL date), and will be held every two months (IRL days) thereafter.

All legislation passed by the parliament and the Commission will be divided into two categories: Regulations and Directives. Regulations are compulsory laws and legislation, while Directives are set goals that each member nation must implement within a specified period of time.

The Commonwealth will be renamed to the Phoenix Commonwealth."
- Treaty of Lanterns, Phoenix Commonwealth 2026

On the 8th of January 2026, the members of the former Ruaunese Commonwealth, now the Phoenix Commonwealth, would sign a landmark treaty that would heavily influence the course of politics on Gaia. The Commonwealth would make the move from a diplomatic organisation to a government on its own, with its own parliament to dictate laws across the Commonwealth. This significantly changes the course of politics, as power is slowly transferred to a transnational entity. A move like this has been circulated by the leaders of Ru'aun and Deutscheslanden, but nobody could have expected 2026 to begin with such a bold move. TelePoll noted that the Treaty of Lanterns was incredibly popular, citing 72% approval, especially popular among RWP and PDP voters.

Following this, Vice-Chairman Leon Legacy of Ru'aun would inaugurate the interim parliament, with a dozen of the Commission's members and seventy MPs from abroad attending the inauguration. The organisation now faces steep polarisation across its member nations, with Deutscheslanden inaugurating its first right-wing president since the 60s and Ru'aun facing a snap election. As well, Terre France, the nation that pioneered the agreement, has sought independence from Deutscheslanden to prevent its consistent dismissals from previous summits. Whatever the future holds for the Commonwealth, there is both uncertainty and hope. Uncertainty rising from the polarised political landscape and hope for cooperation between the long-distant countries.
